

Different Ways People Use the Land Today in Montana

There are multiple things people do differently using the land in Montana today. Many of these things consist of the activities and jobs people in Montana have today like farming, and ranching. Two percent of the population is a rancher or a farmer. People also use land for fun things like camping, and gardening. 34.01 percent of people aged 18 to 29 years old have gone camping just in 2018. About 36 million American households grow foods by gardening. When people use the land they can also destroy it, the ways people destroy the land of Montana is by doing vandalism. Vandalism is many things like spray painting this and even breaking things. But most of the time the land is used for farming, ranching, and planting crops
